JAMMU & KASHMIR: IT'S DOWNSIZING AND BIFURCATION

The restive Indian state of Jammu & Kashmir (J&K), whose political status was dramatically overhauled by introducing The Jammu & Kashmir Redistribution Bill by the BJP government on 6th August, 2019, has rarely been free of controversy.

The modification of a constitutional provision that grants J&K special status—a greater degree of autonomy than that enjoyed by other Indian states—has been hotly contested since its creation in 1950. Those against this provision : Article 370, have argued that all three parts of the state—the Muslim-dominated Kashmir valley, the Hindu-majority Jammu, and Ladakh, which has considerable Buddhist presence—should not have laws independent of the Indian constitution. India's ruling Bharatiya Janata Party subscribed to this school of thought.

This section also fears neighbouring Pakistan's influence on Kashmir and its attempt to capture more territory in the Kashmir valley. The modern political history of the state itself is a tale of its often changing status beginning in the 19th century, turmoil following India's partition in 1947, and simmering uncertainty since then. Two months after independence, on 20 October 1947, Kashmir was attacked by a large number of armed tribesmen, forcing Hari Singh, the ruler of Kashmir to write to Governor General, Lord Mountbatten, asking India to provide military aid. Attached to this letter asking for aid was the instrument of accession to India, which was signed by Singh. Mountbatten signed the instrument on 27 October 1947. As per the document, however, only defence, external affairs and communications would be handed over to the government of India, while control over all other sectors was to be retained by ruler, under the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution Act 1939. These conditions were peculiar to Kashmir's accession to India, unlike the 565 native states that had chosen to integrate fully with India. Article 370 was therefore introduced in the constitution to preserve the specific terms under which Kashmir had agreed to accede to India.

In its historic decision of ending Jammu & Kashmir's special status in the Indian Union, the BJP government extended all provisions of the Constitution to the State in one go, downsized the State into two Union Territories and has paved a way to complete new destiny for the people. Here we are discussing this hot topic to spread awareness and also to get into the depth of the matter encompassing not just the legal aspect but also sociological and political aspects.
